NCHL, and committee service at the Department, College, and University levels. This position also involves key advising duties, which may include supporting graduate and undergraduate students in service learning and professional development, securing internship and/or residency placements, connecting students with the alumni network, providing mentoring during the administrative residency, and career coaching.

The faculty employee classification of this position will be a 12-month full-time appointment if it is determined that teaching and program management duties will be assigned.

Position Responsibilities

- Teaching: The faculty members have teaching responsibilities in the Department's masters and undergraduate programs. Areas may include health systems organization, management of healthcare delivery organizations, physician group management, human resources management, strategy, marketing, innovation, ambulatory management, post acute/long-term care management, executive skills, residency practicums, or other specialized areas depending on qualifications and experience. Additionally, this position may, upon hire or later, assume program management responsibility within the department.
- Research: The faculty members will share in promoting the scholarship and research of the department's faculty and students.
- Service: The faculty members will serve internally on Departmental, College, and/or University committees as assigned. The faculty members will represent the Department to selected professional organizations, as well as in a professional capacity in their field, e.g., reviewer, or conference organizer.
- Other (For instance administrative duties, etc.): Career advising, case competition coaching, etc.
