postgraduate research students. You will have a demonstrated capacity to extend your own research portfolio, and to develop and maintain links with relevant community organisations, professional bodies and colleagues nationally and internationally.

You will work within a small passionate team who take pride in being able to make a contribution to the field of audiology by developing competent new-graduate clinicians. You will have access to the latest evidence based practice, whilst having the opportunity for interprofessional practice and education. You will have an opportunity to contribute to the strategic planning of the School of Psychology, Speech and Hearing and, more specifically, the Speech and Hearing Clinic.

Who You Are

The successful applicant must hold a Ph.D degree in Audiology or a closely aligned discipline, and have a demonstrated record of published research. The successful candidate will have a commitment to excellence in teaching or core courses in particularly in the areas of paediatric audiology, auditory processing, and diagnostic audiology at both the undergraduate and postgraduate levels, delivering effective teaching methods that enable a wide range of learners to succeed. The appointee will demonstrate a background in supervising final year undergraduate projects, Masters and Ph.D. students and proactively attract research funding.

Who You Will Work With

The School of Psychology, Speech and Hearing | Te Kura Mahi ?-Hirikapo has recently been created by joining the two former Departments of Psychology and Communication Disorders and will include an estimated total of 802 equivalent full-time students and approximately 66 full-time equivalent staff. The school offers courses in Psychology from introductory psychology to PhD level, including nationally and internationally recognised applied programmes in Clinical Psychology and in Industrial and Organisational Psychology. The school also offers accredited programmes in speech-language therapy and audiology. This role will teach in Audiology courses, but will be encouraged to collaborate across disciplines in the School and in the University, as is relevant.
