Science degree accredited by The Council for Accreditation of Counseling and Related Educational Programs (CACREP). We are seeking motivated, collaborative faculty, eager to engage with community members, and whose research, teaching, and service directly engage questions of practice related to how individuals with disabilities, particularly those from minoritized groups, achieve independence, inclusion, employment, and health. Priority status will be given to scholars who use a critical lens and demonstrate innovative approaches in transforming existing educational, work, social, and health systems to ensure the well-being of people from minoritized groups and individuals with disabilities. Ideal candidates are able to make clear connections between their research, teaching, and service, and the unique intersectional needs of people of color with disabilities. Fundamentally, we believe in equity of opportunity, social justice advocacy, and providing holistic, integrative supports. Our program emphasizes rehabilitation counselor skill development through innovation in clinical supervision and practical experiences in interdisciplinary, integrated-health settings. We have a particular interest in early-career faculty who have a record of research and/or practice in counselor supervision, culturally-responsive interventions, and working with interdisciplinary, community-based support services.

We are looking for new faculty who have aptitude in research, teaching, and counselor supervision, and who are eligible to serve as core faculty in a CACREP accredited rehabilitation counselor training program. There is potential for secondary affiliation in the Mental Health Counseling Program. Our program includes traditional campus classes and fully-online format options, so applicants should have interest and ability in providing high quality distance instruction.

Appointments are for a ten-month academic year beginning in the Fall 2022.

University at Buffalo is an affirmative action equal opportunity employer and, in keeping with our commitment, welcomes all to apply including veterans and individuals with disabilities.
