Job Description

This faculty member will conduct research & teach undergraduate and graduate courses in Exercise Biochemistry, Exercise Molecular Biology, Exercise Immunology, and/or Psychophysiology/Neuroscience. It is expected that the individual will have an active research agenda with applicants demonstrating continuing success in external grant writing and grant funding. The successful applicant will be able to collaborate with, complement, and expand ongoing research in the Applied Physiology Lab, which includes the Integrative Metabolism & Disease Prevention Research Group, the Psychophysiology Lab, and/or the Behavioral Neuroscience Research Lab. Tenured and tenure track faculty are expected to mentor U-Grad and Graduate students in Kinesiology. Typical teaching load is two organized courses in each of the long semesters; optional summer teaching assignments are usually available. Experience teaching online and hybrid courses using Canvas or a similar learning management system is desirable.
