the NCTRC credentialing standards. The program is housed within a school dedicated to interprofessional education and collaborative rehabilitation sciences, which includes Physical Therapy, Occupational Therapy, and Athletic Training, providing robust opportunities for interprofessional education and scholarly collaboration.

The candidate will:

- Teach undergraduate courses in recreational therapy and related topics
- Advise and mentor students pursuing a bachelor's degree in Recreational Therapy
- Participate in curriculum development and program evaluation
- Engage in service to the School, College, University, and profession
- Contribute to the development of a strong academic and clinical learning environment
- Collaborate with faculty across disciplines in interprofessional teaching and service initiatives

Located in Norfolk, Virginia, Old Dominion University is a research-intensive, public institution committed to innovation, inclusion, and community engagement. The School of Rehabilitation Sciences provides a vibrant academic environment for faculty dedicated to student success, interprofessional learning, and service to the broader community. The ODU Recreational Therapy Program is a model of academic excellence and leadership in the field and an ideal home for educators who want to make a lasting impact.
